

Testimony in SUPPORT of HB 4293-4298, 4300
Presented to the Michigan House Committee on Judiciary

May 10, 2023

Alex Goyette, Senior Public Policy Associate

Chair Breen, Vice Chairs Edwards and Fink, and Distinguished Committee Members:

The Tahirih Justice Center (Tahirih) is a national legal advocacy and direct services organization, founded in 1997, that has assisted over 25,000 survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, human trafficking, and other forms of gender-based violence.

Tahirih has unique legal and policy expertise in forced and child marriage in the United States. Through Tahirih's Forced Marriage Initiative, launched in 2011, we have worked on several hundred cases of forced marriage across the country. We have also compiled extensive research on child marriage in the United States, including a 50-state statutory compilation, an in-depth report that compares and analyzes all states' minimum marriage age laws and exceptions, a compilation of stories from survivors of child marriage in the United States, and a policy brief reflecting on progress made in the national movement to end child marriage since 2016.<sup>i</sup>

We submit this testimony in strong support of the suite of legislation to end child marriage in Michigan. These important measures would take the simple but critical step necessary to protect children, mostly girls, from the harms of child marriage.

We have submitted separate testimony on related legislation as well: supporting both HB 4301 and HB 4302 with minor amendments, and opposing HB 4299.

Current law provides little protection for children facing a forced marriage. A single parent can consent to the marriage of a 16- or 17-year-old, setting up potential nightmare scenarios in situations where even if one parent has the minor's best interest at heart, the other can arrange a child's marriage. We have seen cases where this is done for financial gain, for status within isolated communities, or even to undermine custody arrangements between divorced parents.

Younger children can also be legally married in Michigan with a judge's approval, and in fact Michigan is one of only seven states that still sets no absolute minimum marriage age in statute. While judicial approval may seem like a strong safeguard, statute provides no guidance for judges on how to evaluate for abuse or coercion and does not even address whether the minor themselves consents to the marriage.

Indeed Michigan law never asks whether the child herself wants to marry, only whether their parents or a judge want to marry her off.

This legislation would take a simple but powerful step to protect Michigan's children by making the legal minimum marriage age the same as the legal age of adulthood – 18.

The reform proposed by this legislation will accomplish three critical commonsense objectives—preventing forced marriages of children; ensuring that both parties to a marriage are fully empowered to protect themselves from abuse and coercion; and preventing early marriages that put children at acute risk.

Forced marriages happen in the United States for many reasons. They can arise in families and communities where parents expect to control the marriage choices of their children, and where marrying young is the norm. Some individuals are pushed to marry to prevent or address sex or pregnancy outside of marriage, or as a cover-up for rape or sexual abuse. Sometimes an abusive dating partner will threaten or coerce an individual into marriage. In other cases, sexual predators can target, “groom,” and then pressure vulnerable girls to marry them in order to further isolate and control them and to have round-the-clock access to them without fear of prosecution. Children can also be compelled to marry when impoverished, abusive, or neglectful parents try to offload the responsibility for their care onto others. Some parents even seek to gain financially from such arrangements.

While both adults and children can face forced marriages, children are especially susceptible to coercion, and particularly disempowered to advocate for themselves because of their legal status as minors. Many “escape routes” that are wide open to adults are closed, or much more challenging to access, for minors.

Without being able to exercise self-help options minors must rely on systems-help, but are often reluctant to do so because of mandatory reporting laws on child abuse. They realize that disclosing abuse could set in motion serious consequences over which they would have no control, including that their parents could go to jail or that they and their siblings could be put into foster care.

Even when minors do make a report it may get them nowhere, or even make matters worse for them. In Tahirih's experience across the country, child protective services typically fails to investigate forced marriage allegations, considering it outside their mandate, or does not take appropriate action. This can subject a girl to retaliation for reaching out, causing her to rescind her appeal for help and making it more difficult for advocates to work with her as perpetrator monitors her more closely or may expedite the marriage.

In addition to addressing these concerns about forced marriages, these bills will ensure that both parties to genuine marriages will be on equal legal footing with each other, rather than leaving a minor party at such a harsh disadvantage in the relationship.

The bills will also spare girls from the domino effects of marrying under age 18, which can dramatically heighten their vulnerability to abuse. Up to 80% of marriages involving someone under age 18 end in divorce, and teen mothers who marry and later divorce can be made worse-off long-term—more than twice as likely to live in future poverty—than teen mothers who do not marry.

Women who marry as teens are also more likely to have more children overall and to do so more quickly, to drop out of school, to have fewer work opportunities, and to wind up poor. They also experience more medical and mental health problems, both short- and long-term.<sup>ii</sup> All this can increase their dependence, and limit their options in the event of divorce or domestic violence.

In sum, there are significant child-protection concerns inherent to every child marriage. Michigan’s current law on minimum marriage age does not do enough to prevent these harms.

There is a rapidly growing national movement to overhaul antiquated minimum marriage age laws that put children at risk. Since 2016, eight states have ended child marriage entirely: Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and Vermont.

Several other states also have pending bills that, like this suite of legislation, would ban all marriage under age 18. Michigan should assert its place as a leader in this historic movement by taking swift action now to advance these bill.

We respectfully urge the Committee to support HB 4293-4298 and 4300 to end child marriage in Michigan.

We additionally urge the Committee to support HB 4301-4302, though with minor amendments. Please see separate testimony.
